Oysters.—R is the letter mysteriously controlling the seasonable incoming and outgoing of one of man's best friends—the noble oyster. It is supposed to come in with September and leave with the last of the April showers. The bivalve is of ancient heritage; so ancient, in fact, as to discount the Christian era in antiquity and be lost to sight though to memory dear in the foggy oysterity of the patriarchal tribes. Let us try to imagine life without an oyster. It cannot be done. Thackery paid an American oyster the grandest compliment that can ever immortally laurel its crustaceous brow. It was his first saddle-rock. He took it up tenderly—one more unfortunate—on his trident. It was youth at the pleasure and pleasure at the prow sliding down the old cellar door at home. A scraphic glow calciumated the maily bosom, of the king of snobs, as with closed eyes he quietly murmured, "Was it a baby?" Could mortal man have paid a lotter tribute?
